

Problem 1 c)

Processes B, D, and E can have their resource requests fulfilled.

If we assume these processes can run to completion, then process A can fulfill its I/O request.

If we then assume process A can run to completion, process C can fulfill its CPU request and run to completion.

With the assumption that processes will run to completion provided their resource requests can be met, deadlock should not occur.

